Homework

- Children should do the homework and do it appropriately
- You can make it possible

Research...

Confirms that students who consistently do their homework perform better in school than those that do not.

With a little bit of help, you can make the difference

- You have the opportunity to make a difference for YOUR child
- How you help vs what you actually can do varies from child to child
- Your involvement is making a statement to your child that school and homework are important.

What is homework?

Whose homework is it Anyway?

- Important to recognize that it is NOT your homework
- It is your job to ensure that the necessary atmosphere, information and materials needed for them to do their best is available and in place.
- Make it clear to you child that it is your expectation that your child complete their homework on their own each night
- This is not a subject for negotiation
- This is their job.
- Maintaining consistent expectations you reinforce the belief that homework is a priority

Your support

- Determine how homework information is given to your child by their teacher
- Establish a method for your child to regularly transfer homework from school to home
- Establish a scheduled time for homework
- Set up a homework calendar
- We all need a special place to do our homework

Your support

- Gather all the necessary material ahead of time
- Most teachers establish a pattern of homework assignments
